E. SESSION SUMMARY: SG1A

Q: "Does the [REDACTED] have contraband?"
 A: Yes. This ship is the one detected in 91-16-O-A. Contraband is in the form of drug-processing chemicals.

Q: "...to offload to what ship (give name)?"
 A: The [REDACTED] SG1A

Q: "Does the [REDACTED] have contraband?"
 A: No. While there is an impression that one bill of lading concerning cheap plastic radios has the wrong numbers on it, and that this "mistake" is intentional, there are no indications of drugs, etc. SG1A

Q: "Does the [REDACTED] have contraband?"
 A: Yes. There is a brown, metal shipping container with vertically corrugated sides. A block in one upper right corner consists of bright yellow and bright blue patches of color. There are many 55-gal drums in it. All the drums contain a milky-white, translucent fluid, but the liquid in about 40-50 of the drums can be treated to precipitate out some kind of contraband drug. The drums which contain the precipitable liquid are stored in the container on their sides, while the rest are stored upright. There is also a slight difference in the color of the sealing bands around the drums.

SG1A

A: The contraband will not be off-loaded to another ship, but will come into port in the U.S. (entry port believed to be San Francisco), sometime near the end of this month. Its transfer out of port is believed to be by SEA/LAND truck lines, and will be destined for a customer with name somewhat like (impressions hazy):
