Whereas the education program established by the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, also referred to as the GI Bill, became the bedrock of the greatest expansion of industrial, commercial, and technological innovation in the history of the Nation;

Whereas the veterans who served during World War II have distinguished themselves in war and peace, earned the Nation's highest honors, and left a legacy unmatched in the Nation's history; and

Whereas June 6, 2006, is a suitable occasion to recognize the persons who were inducted into the Armed Forces for service during World War II because it is the anniversary of D-Day, when tens of thousands of persons who had been inducted into the Armed Forces were among the allied forces that invaded Normandy, France: Now, therefore, be it
