H. J. RES. 413

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER 7 (legislative day, SEPTEMBER 12), 1994

Received

OCTOBER 8 (legislative day, SEPTEMBER 12), 1994

Read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

JOINT RESOLUTION

Designating November 1, 1994, as “National Family Literacy Day”.

Whereas millions of American families are trapped in a cycle of poverty, dependency, and undereducation;

Whereas research shows that the most important factor in determining the life chances of a child is the level of educational attainment of the parents of the child;

Whereas a child whose parents lack a high school diploma are more than twice as likely to live in poverty than a child whose parents are high school graduates;

Whereas the level of education of a parent affects the level of literacy of the children of the parent, even when the children become adults;

Whereas family literacy programs can increase parent involvement in the education of children of the parent;

Whereas a child in a family literacy program demonstrates greater gains than a child in a child-focused program;

Whereas an adult participating in a family literacy program is more likely to remain in the program than an adult participating in an adult-focused program;

Whereas family literacy programs, such as Even Start and Head Start, provide a promising approach to improving the literacy skills of families; and

Whereas, if literacy is to be increased among the next generation of families, it is necessary to use family literacy programs to increase the educational skills of parents and children of the parents: Now, therefore, be it
